Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Re claim 33, in response to the applicant's argument that Peter-Hoblyn et al. fail to disclose an exhaust treatment system that is entirely separate from the fuel supply system (page 8 of the Amendment), the examiner respectfully disagrees. In Peter-Hoblyn et al., there is a separating means (20) to separate an emulsion of HC fuel and an aqueous solution of NOx-reducing agent. The NOx-reducing agent is only applied to an exhaust treatment system; and the HC fuel is only applied to the engine. Thus, Peter-Hoblyn et al. clearly discloses the claimed limitation in dispute.

Re claims 13, 33, and 34, in response to the applicant's argument that Peter-Hoblyn et al. fail to disclose a pressure reservoir (page 9 of the Amendment), the examiner again respectfully disagrees. The surge tank (30) in Peter-Hoblyn et al. is a fluid storage container that stores a fluid in both liquid and gaseous phases with the gas phase on top of the liquid phase. As admitted by applicant (see the last full paragraph of page 9), if a liquid level in the surge tank in Peter-Hoblyn et al. reaches a threshold value, a "pressure buildup" (presumably by the gas phase that is occupying a lesser volume) becomes critical; and a valve is opened to allow an excess NOx-reducing agent to flow to a fuel tank (10). Since a pump is not used to pressurize the excess NOx-reducing agent back to the fuel tank and the force that pushes the liquid phase out of the surge tank is from the gas phase, it should be inherent to applicant that the surge tank (30) in Peter-Hoblyn et al. is a pressure reservoir.
